

CONSUMER SCIENCES, MS

The Master of Science in Consumer Sciences is a 30-credit-hour degree program that offers advanced study in two complementary concentration areas.

Consumer Economics Concentration

The Consumer Economics concentration offers an applied microeconomics approach to understanding consumers in home, policy, and market environments. This concentration prepares students to continue study in a doctoral program or employment in a research-oriented setting investigating consumer decision-making, personal finance, and related family and consumer policy. This research-oriented concentration requires the successful completion of a thesis.

Family Financial Planning and Counseling Concentration

The Family Financial Planning and Counseling concentration focuses on the knowledge and skills necessary for a career in financial planning and related careers. The curriculum fulfills the educational requirements to sit for the CFP® certification exam that leads to the CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ certification registered with the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards, Inc. Students who successfully complete the concentration may sit for the CFP® certification exam that leads to the CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ certification. The concentration also fulfills the educational requirements to sit for the Accredited Financial Counselor® exam offered by the Association for Financial Counseling and Planning Education®. Successful completion of a capstone project, practicum, or portfolio is required.

Plan I: Thesis

The Consumer Economics Concentration requires completion of a thesis (Plan I). Upon admission to the M.S. program in Consumer Sciences, students are assigned an interim advisor (i.e., program coordinator or program director). The interim advisor will assist the student in the evaluation of previous work and selection of coursework. Students identify a permanent master's program advisor no later than the end of the first year of study for Consumer Economics concentration and end of the first semester of study for FFPC concentration. Advisors help students plan a course of study and research or professional internship experiences. Students should consult their advisor at least once per semester to review their progress. Students pursuing the Consumer Economics Concentration will select a thesis advisor who will assist in the formulation of the thesis committee. A student's advisor may also serve as their thesis advisor.

See the Master's Degree Academic Policies section of this catalog for more information.

Plan II: Non-Thesis

The Family Financial Planning and Counseling Concentration is a Plan II program. As such, no thesis is required. Instead, Plan II students complete a supervised practicum or a capstone project.

A limited number of graduate assistantships and graduate school fellowships are available. The number of assistantships available varies each year. Graduate assistants must be available in-person approximately 20 hours/week. These assistantships are awarded on a competitive basis. Graduate assistants may be asked to assist with teaching, research, and service missions of the academic unit to which they are assigned. The application for Graduate Assistantship should be submitted before January 15 of each year for full consideration. For more information on the Financial Support, contact the Department of Consumer Sciences Graduate Coordinator.
